FAITH AND HOPE.

By PEALE.

Rembrandt Peale, the painter, was born in Bucks county, Penn., February 22, 1778. His father was Charles William Peale, a well known painter. At the age of seventee he executed a portrait of Washington. In 1891 he went to England to study under Benjamin West. After many trips abroad he returned to Philadelphia in 1827. Like his father, he lectured on natural history. He died in Philadelphia, October 3, 1862.

OH, don't be sorrowful, darling! Now, don't be sorrowful, pray; For, taking the year together, my dear,

There isn't more night than day. It's rainy weather, my loved one; Time's wheels they heavily run: But taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more cloud than sun.

We're old folks now, companion-Our heads they are growing gray; But taking the year all round, my dear, You always will find the May.

We've had our May, my darling, And our roses, long ago; And the time of the year is come, my dear, For the long dark nights and the snow.

But God is God, my faithful, Of night as well as of day; And we feel and know that we can go Wherever He leads the way; Ay, God of night, my darling! Of the night of death so grim; And the gate from life that leads out, good wife, Is the gate that leads to Him.

THE COURT

No Fears as to the Outcome of the Argument in Virginia Suffrage Suits.

TWO BRILLIANT ARGUMENTS

The State's Counsel Argued the Case on Its Merits as Well as Jurisdiction.

Attorney-General Anderson and Mr. Frank W. Christian, who represented the State Board of Canvassers in the argument of the Jones-Selden suffrage cases before the Supreme Court of the United States Monday and Tuesday, have returned to the city. The case has been submitted, and the court will hand down its opinion at a later sitting.

The argument of the case by counsel was given close attention by the justices and several of them asked quesions, the trend of which indicates to some extent their views in advance of the extent their views in advance of the opinion to be handed down. Justice Holmes wrote the opinion of the court in the Jackson W. Giles case, from Alabama, in which similar questions were involved. The opinion is adverse to the contention of the petitioners in that case. Several of the other justices are on record in cases involving the same or similar issues. Justices Harlan, Brower and Brown asked many questions, all of which were promptly answered by the coursel for this State.

THIS ARGUMENT,

THE ARGUMENT.

counsel for this State.

Mr. Wise, counsel for the negroes, opened the argument Monday in a speech of two hours and forty minutes. Major Anderson, attorney-general for this State, spoke for fifteen or twenty minutes that day before adjournment, and resumed and closed his argument on the following day. Mr. Christian followed the attorney-general in an argument that was condensed and conclusive, and in the opinion of lawyers who heard it absolutely unanswerable. Mr. Wise closed the argument in a speech of twenty minutes. Both Mr. Christian and Major Anderson were warmly congratulated by the bar and the laity on their arguments.

Mr. Christian contended that if the petitioners had been wronged the remedy was in an action at law for damages against the election or registration officers so unlawfully and wrongfully depriving them of their rights, but the burden of proof that they had been so deprived and by whom was upon them, not upon the defendants. The speaker argued with closeness and clearness the general and special question of jurisdiction, contending that the court had no a political and not a legal question.

MAJOR ANDERSON'S POSITION.

Attorney-General Anderson argued the case broadly on its merits, defending the Virginia Constitution against all charges of discrimination in violation of the Fifteenth Amendment, which was the only ground on which the United States could have jurisdiction. Granting for argument's sake that the court asserted jurisdiction, he showed from the opinion in the case of Williams vs. Mississippi, in which all the questions involved were thoroughly threshed out by this court, that there was no violation of the amendment to the Federal Constitution. One of the most striking phases of the argument of Major Anderson was his answer to the charges of indefiniteness in the language of the Wirginia suffrage clause. In this he quoted at some length from the suffrage clauses of the Constitution of other States, and showed that several of them prescribed qualifications as a condition of suffrage that were very much broader and more Indefinite than the Virginia provision. Among those quoted was that of Connecticut, Idaho and other States. Some of these made the morals of the applicant for registration ground for excluding him, and others prescribed that the prospective voter must be a quoted and peaceable man. The tion ground for excluding him, and others prescribed that the prospective voter must be a quiet and peaceable man. The purpose of this argument and quantions from other Constitutions was to show that if the Virginia Constitution was liable to maindministration, those of many other States (and some of them have stood for many years) are very much more liable to this objection. Nowhere in the Virginia suffrage clause was there any discrimination on account of race or color, or of former servitude.

The opinion of the court may be handed down in a few days, and it may be many weeks before it will be promulgated. Virginia lawyers have no misgivings as to the outcome of the case.
